

333 Front
n, Alaska at to receive
of the torrid
tries should

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

of only 15 food products which feed the

Top Rivals To Meet In The Potato Bowl

GRAND FORK, ND— For those in the know about potatoes, the annual Potato Bowl in Grand Forks is a must attend event. The salute to the potato features a potato queen contest, tractor pull, parade and of course, the big football game.

If you want to attend, and its highly recommended, contact the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 202 N. 3rd St, Suite 200, Grand Forks, ND 58203 or call: 800-866-4566.

Specialty Times

hter
d er this play er historic Ketchicovered by the of 333 Front

t, Alaska.
at to receive
of the torrid
tries should

Allegations Of "Fish Stories" Par For The Course At Local Events

The allegations were flying as hundreds of fisherman, anglers and sportsman alike told their stories of catching "the big one" or "the one that got away". No one could prove wrong or right as the tall tales grew almost as fast as the fish themselves.

In one such case, an angler who participated in the Mississippi Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo in Gulfport, MS, claimed he rode in on his fish to shore, bareback! This like all of the stories, were not witnessed by anyone in attendance. And, with no moderator or regulations, the mood got tense as the stories grew into sagas, sagas into volumes and volumes into an entire set of encyclopedias.

If any one story raised more controversy, it had to be the story told by a fisherman from Hook-linsnsinka, Finland. According to confidential sources, the story

starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted as to whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

Top Rivals To Meet In The Potato Bowl

GRAND FORK, ND— For those in the know about potatoes, the annual Potato Bowl in Grand Forks is a must attend event. The salute to the potato features a potato queen contest, tractor pull, parade and of course, the big football game.

If you want to attend, and its highly recommended, contact the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 202 N. 3rd St, Suite 200, Grand Forks, ND 58203 or call: 800-866-4566.

of only 15 food products which feed the

Top Rivals To Meet In The Potato Bowl

GRAND FORK, ND— For those in the know about potatoes, the annual Potato Bowl in Grand Forks is a must attend event. The salute to the potato features a potato queen contest, tractor pull, parade and of course, the big football game.

If you want to attend, and its highly recommended, contact the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 202 N. 3rd St, Suite 200, Grand Forks, ND 58203 or call: 800-866-4566.

Specialty Times

Allegations Of "Fish Stories" Par For The Course At Local Events

The allegations were flying as hundreds of fisherman, anglers and sportsman alike told their stories of catching "the big one" or "the one that got away". No one could prove wrong or right as the tall tales grew almost as fast as the fish themselves.

In one such case, an angler who participated in the Mississippi Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo in Gulfport, MS, claimed he rode in on his fish to shore, bareback! This like all of the stories, were not witnessed by anyone in attendance. And, with no moderator or regulations, the mood got tense as the stories grew into sagas, sagas into volumes and volumes into an entire set of encyclopedias.

If any one story raised more controversy, it had to be the story told by a fisherman from Hook-linsnsinka, Finland. According to confidential sources, the story

starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted as to whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

Specialty Times

Fish Pirate's Daughter Caught Up In Crowd

Ketchikan, Alaska—In a musical melodrama that has played out for 25 years, an innocent young daughter and her honest fisherman father have once again fallen in with a fish pirate and ladies of the evening.

In Ketchikan, every Friday evening, for the last 25 years, from the beginning of July to the beginning of September this play meant to depict historic Ketchikan, has been sponsored by the Main Street Theatre of 338 Front St. in Ketchikan, Alaska. It has been said that to receive further information of the torrid event, interested parties should call: 907-225-4792.

Record Crowds Are "Peeling Out" To Get To Potato Festival

WILLOW, AK— Competition for the largest potato sculpture has created a frenzy in this Alaskan town. Using whole potatoes, the sculptors ply their craft to see who will win top honors.

The potato is one of only 15 food products which feed the entire world.

Not only is there loads of potato art, but for the hungry, loads of potato food, and live entertainment.

Write to the Willow Trading Post Potato Festival at PO Box 49, Willow, AK 99688 or phone: 907-495-6457 to see if this spuds for you!

Specialty Times

Fish Pirate's Daughter Caught Up In Crowd

Ketchikan, Alaska—In a musical melodrama that has played out for 25 years, an innocent young daughter and her honest fisherman father have once again fallen in with a fish pirate and ladies of the evening.

In Ketchikan, every Friday evening, for the last 25 years, from the beginning of July to the beginning of September this play meant to depict historic Ketchikan, has been sponsored by the Main Street Theatre of 338 Front St. in Ketchikan, Alaska. It has been said that to receive further information of the torrid event, interested parties should call: 907-225-4792.

Record Crowds Are "Peeling Out" To Get To Potato Festival

WILLOW, AK— Competition for the largest potato sculpture has created a frenzy in this Alaskan town. Using whole potatoes, the sculptors ply their craft to see who will win top honors.

The potato is one of only 15 food products which feed the

Allegations Of "Fish Stories" Par For The Course At Local Events

The allegations were flying as hundreds of fisherman, anglers and sportsman alike told their stories of catching "the big one" or "the one that got away". No one could prove wrong or right as the tall tales grew almost as fast as the fish themselves.

starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

In one such case, an angler who participated in the Mississippi Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo in Gulfport, MS, claimed he rode in on his fish to shore, bareback! This like all of the stories, were not witnessed by anyone in attendance. And, with no moderator or regulations, the mood got tense as the stories grew into sagas, sagas into volumes and volumes into an entire set of encyclopedias.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

Top Rivals To Meet In The Potato Bowl

GRAND FORK, ND— For those in the know about potatoes, the annual Potato Bowl in Grand Forks is a must attend event. The salute to the potato features a potato queen contest, tractor pull, parade and of course, the big football game.

If you want to attend, and its highly recommended, contact the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 202 N. 3rd St, Suite 200, Grand Forks, ND 58203 or call: 800-866-4566.

If any one story raised more controversy, it had to be the story told by a fisherman from Hook-linsnsinka, Finland. According to confidential sources, the story starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

Allegations Of "Fish Stories" Par For The Course At Local Events

The allegations were flying as hundreds of fisherman, anglers and sportsman alike told their stories of catching "the big one" or "the one that got away". No one could prove wrong or right as the tall tales grew almost as fast as the fish themselves.

starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

In one such case, an angler who participated in the Mississippi Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo in Gulfport, MS, claimed he rode in on his fish to shore, bareback! This like all of the stories, were not witnessed by anyone in attendance. And, with no moderator or regulations, the mood got tense as the stories grew into sagas, sagas into volumes and volumes into an entire set of encyclopedias.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

If any one story raised more controversy, it had to be the story told by a fisherman from Hook-linsnsinka, Finland. According to confidential sources, the story

starts in Seward, Alaska at the Seward Silver Salmon Derby, where, as the story goes, the Finnish fisherman won by a nose. A great debate erupted whether salmon even had noses, but the debate was cut short when the fisherman rose from his seat to proclaim that not only had he won that derby, but was the triple crown winner, having won the Memorial Weekend Salmon Derby in Petersburg, Alaska and the Manistee County Salmon and Trout Derby in Manistee, Michigan. This statement sent the hoards running for current record books to try and disprove the bold and daring challenge to all other tales of fishing wizardry.

As of this moment, the stories have not stopped, nor are they expected to. There seems to be no end, or no stopping the madness that is gripping the country.

Top Rivals To Meet In The Potato Bowl

GRAND FORK, ND— For those in the know about potatoes, the annual Potato Bowl in Grand Forks is a must attend event. The salute to the potato features a potato queen contest, tractor pull, parade and of course, the big football game.

If you want to attend, and its highly recommended, contact the Grand Forks Convention and Visitors Bureau, 202 N. 3rd St, Suite 200, Grand Forks, ND 58203 or call: 800-866-4566.